

I urge the FCC to maintain current rules on media ownership.

The fabric of this country and its democratic foundation is based upon a diverse and multitude of independent media outlets and insures the checks and balances provided by freedom of the press. Further consolidation of media ownership will taint the integrity of independent reporting, which raises the possibility of collusion in reporting agendas and cover-ups.

We have too much consolidation now as demonstrated by the lack the media reporting on this FCC vote, which was most likely the agenda that the large corporate owners wanted. In other words the media wanted this issue kept quiet.
